that the house could not stand the loss. I admitted that I had found an unexpected prevalence of the disease, and suggested that the hogs be set aside in the cooling room until I could communicate with Dr. Salmon, Chief of the Animal Industry Bureau, for instructions.

"Orders came from Dr. Salmon to divide the hogs into three classes, according to the amount of the disease, some to be used as food, some to be rendered into lard, and some to be tanked for grease, according to the printed regulations. I followed this system faithfully, but met with much opposition on the part of the packers, their statement being that they could not stand these losses in business, as they were in competition with other stations where the inspection was not so vigorously inforced.

"Falling in their efforts to induce me could not stand the loss."

The book a harmony deal, and they were passionately denounced as trimmers and traders by the members of a third group which desires the naming of a full reform ticket.

A strong sentiment favoring the nomination of Mayor Weaver marked the fourth group, but there can be little question that ex-Senator Lewis Emery has a majority of the delegates pledged. The wrangling grew so bitter that the party managers, immediately after an organization had been effected, secured a two hours adjournment.

inspection was not so vigorously inforced.

"Failing in their efforts to induce me to relax my inspection, the packers finally made complaints to Mr. Salmon, who detailed Dr. Morris Wooden, of the Chicago force, to look into my methods. He had made careful examination of forty-two hogs which had been condemned, but held under orders from Washington. Dr. Salmon's explanation of this procedure was a desire to have methods all over the country uniform with those of Chicago.

"According to Chicago methods Dr. Wooden decided to condemn to lard and grease tanks 76 per cent of the whole number. I asked him what he thought of the Waterloo inspection, to which he replied that it was much better than in Chicago, because they did not kill the hogs so fast.

repiled that it was much better than in Chicago, because they did not kill the hogs so fast.

"On the following morning, after a conference with the packers, Dr. Wooden came to the office and proceeded to reverse his previous decision, going over his notes with a net result that instead of the 76 per cent condemned to the tanks, 44 per cent were condemned. These hogs were then tanked, and the rest went for meat.

"I was instructed by letter from Washigton to conform to Dr. Wooden's methods. This was in November, 1903. During December condemnations at this plant were numerous, but fewer than previously; but footwithstanding this I seemed unsatisfactory, and one day I was casually informed by the packing house weighmaster that a new inspector was to arrive January 1, 1904.

"This was my first notification of my fate. My official transfer came three days later. While I was in Waterloo, desiring to ascertain for myself the methods pursued at the other Iowa points, I requested a friend to make a trip for me. I being unable to leave my duties.
